The 34th annual Norwood Fishing Derby and Duck Race took place on Saturday to the delight of more than 150 residents, volunteers, officials and amateur anglers at the Hawes Pond.

The weather wasn't exactly optimal, but most of the rain held off during the day to give participants a decent shot at staying dry while reeling in their catches.

Founder and Board of Selectmen member Michael Saad said he was happy to see so many smiling faces at the ponds.

"We've got more than 100 folks fishing here and it's just half-way through," he said during the event. "Everybody's working hard, and we've got the North Walpole Fish and Game Club on the other side of the fence with the prizes, Chris the DJ is doing a great job, we've got the duck race in a little bit, registration is still going on. Former Selectman Helen Abdallah-Donohue is over there with her sister Ollie and Bill Plasko, everything's just going great. Norwood Sportsmen's Club is cooking for me over there in the corner and everybody else is busy catching fish!"

Saad said conditions weren't as good as they could have been but that didn't seem to dampen anyone's spirits.

"You know, it's windy so they're going down lower and they don't bite as much, but that's fine," he said. "I mean the rain was supposed to pour today, but it held off and we've got a good crowd. We've got more than 100 kids and parents and that's really what it's all about."

Saad added he is especially happy to see so many younger

Residents to picket Norwood Hospital

Loss of Psych beds decried

Ariane Komyati

Staff Reporters

Many Norwood residents are angered and concerned about the loss of 61 inpatient psych beds at Norwood Hospital and what they see as a lack of communication from Town officials and Steward Health Care. More than 20 community members gathered at the Morrill Memorial Library on Apr. 27 to discuss the situation, organized and led by Norwood residents Joseph Breton and Dr. George Sigel. The meeting ended with a pledge to picket the hospital on May 10 at noon in protest of the lost beds. The picketing will begin at the corner of East Hoyle Street and Washington Street.

The Norwood Hospital is being rebuilt due to flooding from a storm in June 2020. Steward Health Care, the hospital's owner, plans to open the new Norwood Hospital in 2024. Earlier this month, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health (DPH) confirmed that Steward Health Care is moving the 61 inpatient psych beds from the Norwood Hospital to the Good Samaritan Hospital in Brockton. Last year, the DPH also announced that they were not requiring Norwood Hospital to keep its obstetric and maternity services, which concerned many residents. "They [Steward Health Care] are doing away with anything that's a liability," stated one meeting attendee. "We want to advocate for the people who are often ignored."

Breton and the meeting attendees are concerned about the lack of communication concerning the loss of the psych beds. "We did not get any public hearing," he stated. Many community members expressed their outrage about this. A few meeting attendees noted that they felt the Norwood Board of Selectmen has been dismissive about this issue.

Jami Osbourne, a licensed Mental Health Counselor, Professional Development Director of the MA Mental Health Counselors Association, and a Norwood resident of 40 years, spoke at the meeting. She discussed Chapter 177, an act addressing barriers to the care for mental health. It was passed in August 2022.

"Chapter 177 addresses the need for beds, the need for workforce development, the need for improved access to care, and for the continuity of care," she explained. "There is a shortage of psych beds, especially for children."

Osbourne said that concerned residents should talk to the DPH about Chapter 177 and advocate for the psych beds at the Norwood Hospital. (Acts of 2022 Chapter 177 can be viewed at malegislature.gov/Laws/SessionLaws/Acts/2022/Chapter177).

The loss of psych care felt personal to one Norwood resident, who said she lost her special needs son earlier this year and has a daughter who has been hospitalized for mental health issues. She once spent 24 hours in the ER waiting for a psych bed.

"From a personal standpoint, it feels awful not having psychiatric care in our community. I believe the Norwood Hospital needs to have some place to secure someone who either wants to do harm or is very aggressive," the resident said.

A former Norwood Hospital staff member and Breton both said that before the flood, the Norwood Hospital had a locked hallway in the ER that could fit six patients. This will not be included in the rebuilt hospital. The former staff member also mentioned Steward closing multiple psychiatric units across the state.

"Throughout Steward, there are over 100 [psych] beds that are not being used right now. The Steward ERs are averaging about 50 psych patients daily. For them to be out over 100 beds, I don't understand how the DPH could have allowed that," said the former staff member.

Osbourne discussed "making noise and rattling cages" by calling, emailing and writing to the state and local Representatives. Another community member urged people to contact Gov. Healey.

Some of the meeting attendees were retired nurses. "I've dealt with Steward a lot over the years. You cannot trust them," said Susan Fitzgerald, a retired nurse. She suggested contacting local news stations, such as Channel 4 or Channel 5, about the loss of psych beds. Community members agreed that bad publicity might be the only way to get the attention of Steward Health Care.

"They hate bad publicity," remarked another nurse. One community member suggested calling Norwood Cable to cover meetings discussing the Norwood Hospital.

Another meeting attendee recommended creating a website to

BOH catches up with Animal Control

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Norwood Board of Health (BOH) met on April 25 at the Norwood Senior Center with Norwood Animal Control Officer Henry Cerqueira to catch up on what residents and the Board should be watching out for in the wilds of the Town.

Cerqueira said right now is the most active period for coyotes, so residents should keep an extra eye out for their pets.

"All wildlife has babies right now," he said. "The coyotes are out because they're doing more hunting so they can produce milk for their babies, and as the babies get older they hunt even more to be able to feed them. We have people calling us all the time about foxes having babies in their backyard and, generally, a fox will stay in the area for two-to-three weeks. By then they're looking for a new den so they're not attracting predators."

BOH member Carolyn Riccardi asked if either foxes or coyotes are dangerous to people, especially children.

"They generally don't interact with people unless there's something wrong with them, so the thing to do, whether you see a coyote or a fox, is to make noise, move your arms up and down, make yourself look big and they'll run away," he said. "The problem is most people stay quiet and want to take a picture. Then the fox or coyote will not realize a threat to them. But if you start making noise or throw things at them, they'll be afraid of humans and take off. People try to feed them or take pictures of them, and that creates a problem."

Cerqueira said they've never had a report in Norwood of either a coyote or fox attacking a human.

Riccardi asked if foxes and

Capital Outlay funds Rec. lockers

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Capital Outlay Committee took two votes at its meeting on Thursday to move funds previously allocated for improvements to the Norwood Civic Center Lobby to instead renovate the women’s locker room.

Finance Commission member Myev Bodenhofer said the original votes at Town Meeting back in October of 2021 allocated funds for both the locker room and lobby work respectively, but now because costs have gone up, the recommendation from the Finance Commission is to put the lobby work on hold and take care of the locker room. The original allocation for the locker room was $210,000 and the allocation for the lobby was for $110,000. Bodenhofer said they are now hoping to do the locker room project for the total $320,000.

She said that since it’s about a 50 percent increase in the original allocation, the Finance Commission thought it would be prudent to get Capital Outlay approval.

“So a question of, ‘Is this still something that the Capital Outlay recommends the Town invest in right now?’ came up,” she said. “This is a significant change to the project from a monetary sense, and I don’t want it to be assumed that because we approved the projects, it was okay to just move the money without having the projects come before us as a committee. I think that’s a really important point. It wasn’t the merit of the project, it was the process.”

The Capital Outlay Committee agreed as well that it will look to create a policy on such requests like this, since member and Town Assessor Tim McDonough said he’s never seen a request like this before.

Town Facilities Director Paul Riccardi warned that the Town will probably have some “sticker shock” when it comes to future projects. He pointed to the re-inclusion of a snack bar at the Coakley Middle School rebuild that was originally taken out because of anticipated cost increases.

“That snack bar, at 600 square feet, came in at $684,000,” he said. “We asked the question to the contractor, to the architect and to the project manager: ‘Couldn’t we build a beautiful home for $684,000?’ They said they agreed, but what they’re finding in the trades is that the small things not connected to a main project, prices are through the roof. That and when you get into a bathroom built in 1984, we don’t know what the contractor is going to find when they get into the job. We don’t know how much original plumbing they’re going to replace or reuse, and that’s why we’re asking to move it all, and we fully expect that there will be money left over to go back into free cash.”

Bodenhofer asked then if they should hold off on the renovation until they can do a more substantial rebuild of the Civic Center

“Is this really the right investment now?” she asked. “Would it make sense to invest more and renovate more substantially?”

Bodenhofer continued, pointing out that putting too much money into small repairs might discourage a complete renovation or replacement later on. Planning Board member Ernie Paciorkowski asked if this was a something the Rec. Department, which runs the building, has considered.

Recreation Department Superintendent John Kinney said right now, the only really big ticket item that could need replacing in the coming years would be the kitchen, but he said even then it wouldn’t be a full gut renovation.

“That’s something where you could go to Home Depot or Lowe’s and get a new range and appliances for cheap and have Facilities help us install things rather than having a total gut and sinking $30,000 into that little kitchen for cooking and nutrition classes,” he said. “Which are fantastic, don’t get me wrong. But we don’t want to keep sinking money into projects that we’re going to one day wake up and go, ‘Oh, the Rec Center is going to be relocated eight miles away in a new building,’ and I get that.”

Kinney added that many residents consider the renovation an extremely needed priority.

“I think from my standpoint when you have the women coming in and they know the men’s locker room is already done, there’s a bit of complaint,” he said. “I am just kind of jumping into the frying pan now, but if I was a woman going in there and I knew the guys’ locker room was done and the women’s locker room looks like it does, I would have a lot to complain about.”

The committee voted unanimously first to combine both projects and then, in another vote, to approve the allocation for the women’s locker room.

Fishing Derby

kids starting what could be their initiation into fishing.

“We’ve got about 50 kids seven or under right now,” he said. “It’s just great.”

Newly-minted Norwood Recreation Department Supervisor John Kinney said while growing up in New Hampshire he did a lot of fishing, he’s not really seen an event like the derby in Norwood.

“This is my first go around and I think it’s awesome and fantastic to see so many kids out here fishing, having fun and seeing the smiles, it’s just amazing,” he said. “I grew up in New Hampshire and we did a lot of fishing up there, but on this stage I haven’t been a part of something like this before. It’s really a good time.”

Resident Andrea Garcia said she tagged along with her husband and daughter for the event, who had already caught two rather large looking trout.

“They love to fish and I helped to bring these in,” she said. “Last year was our first time.”

Garcia said her daughter caught a 1.6-pounder and a 1.2-pounder. She added they were bringing them home for dinner that night.

Resident Susan Flanagan said she brought her kids out to try fishing for the first time. “They’re beginner fishermen,” she said. “It’s a great place to start. So far we’re all still dry. It’s just a great community event and it’s nice to get all the kids out here.”

Resident Mary Beth said she brought her daughter out to experience the derby after bringing her son a few years before. “She’s been interested in fishing so we thought we’d give it a whirl,” she said. “It is raining, but it’s just such a fun community event. We see a lot of people we know, it’s close to home, it’s

Resident Michael Nemeskal said he’s been volunteering at the event for at least 12 years now, and has been coming since before he could remember.

“My son used to fish here and I volunteer,” he said. “I put up the canopies, put up the tables and chairs and get together the rods. It’s all about getting the kids to have a good time. We smile when they smile. It’s a good time and I’ve not really seen anything like this in other towns.”

The event started more than 34 years ago after extensive landscaping and work to create the Hawes Pond. Saad said that he set up the derby because he loves to fish and he wanted to share that love with as many youngsters as he could and, hopefully, keep the derby tradition alive for many years to come.

Hospital

spread the word about the loss of the 61 beds. The website could also have the contact information of local politicians so concerned community members can call, email, and write to them about the issue. One community member suggested creating a bi-weekly newsletter about the problem and leaving copies at the library. Another proposed spreading the word about the loss to neighboring communities who rely on the Norwood Hospital.

Breton discussed forming a “core group” of eight to ten community members who will send out emails, plan meetings, create infographics, etc.

Sigel said that the DPH might have been too hasty in approving the new hospital plan. He said the state protocol for reopening the hospital requires Steward to go through a determination of need (DON) process, and Sigel said that wasn’t done correctly.

“The service area is 21 surrounding towns; they identify that as their service area,” he said. “The DPH signed off on the DON submitted by Steward and in that application they have totally eliminated all the mental health services that they committed to when they bought the chain from Caritas a number of years ago.”

As to this point, Sigel pointed out that the 2022 community benefits pamphlet Steward published last year (<https://bit.ly/3Nus65V>) highlights several key mental health services for the 21 surrounding towns it sees as its service area.

“On page 9, they list their priorities and number 1 is ‘Behavioral Health, Mental Health and Substance Abuse Disorder,’” he said. “They have totally eliminated all the mental health services that they committed to when they bought the Caritas Hospital Chain some years ago. So we’re upset that they’re rebuilding very quickly and we’re sort of late to the dance.”

The pamphlet even states that 93 percent of respondents from an informant survey showed that mental and behavioral health issues are “the most concerning, followed by alcohol use disorder (92%) and opioid use disorder (82%). High percentages of respondents also reported suicide (73%) and intimate partner violence (68%) as highly concerning issues.”

Most if not all of these issues intersect with or are directly related to mental health.

“Steward finessed this answer by saying they were still committed to mental health services, all of which would be provided in (Brockton),” Sigel said. “A number of us felt that was not a good or adequate response to run a hospital without an immediate availability of emergency room services and in-patient services – never mind aftercare services. There’s no complete system of care currently in Massachusetts.”

Sigel said this was a break from the company’s promise when it said it would rebuild.

“First of all, just drive by and read their sign,” he said. “The sign they have that blocks the construction site, it just says, ‘New hospital, same commitments.’”

This shrinking of services comes after the announcement last year that the DPH was not requiring Norwood Hospital to retain its obstetric and maternity services, which were being moved to St. Elizabeth’s Hospital in Brighton. The state requires a certain level of service be maintained throughout regional areas for necessary medical services like these and it was determined that moving from Norwood to Brighton would not decrease the accessibility of those services, though several residents, doctors and former Norwood Hospital staff at the public hearings disagreed at the time.

And this loss of service isn’t just happening in Norwood. Commonwealth Magazine reported last month the loss of state-required “necessary” services at six hospitals in the state over the last few years, including pediatric services at Tufts Hospital, the loss of 74 psych beds at Trinity Health in Holyoke, maternity services at Steward’s Morton Hospital in Taunton, the loss of the UMass Memorial Health Care Clinton Hospital pediatric unit and the closure of the Lynn Union Hospital in 2016.

Steward released a statement on the issue, saying it will create a new facility in Brockton:

“This 100,000 square-foot, four-story facility will introduce 77 inpatient psychiatric beds into our region, including two adult psychiatric units and two geriatric psych units, with room for expansion. In addition, outpatient services will include a range of therapies and a partial hospitalization day program to ensure patients remain closely connected to the care they need even after discharge from an inpatient unit. This decision was made following careful deliberation about how Steward can ensure equitable access to all those in need of specialized psychiatric care, while also meeting local demand for non-psychiatric related services and alleviating emergency department boarding times. As part of this optimization plan, Steward will create space for additional medical and surgical beds at Norwood Hospital, including all private rooms to improve our patients’ experience.”

Correction

In the April 20 edition of The Norwood Record, the Page 4 story entitled “George Henry Morse House: Why Morse Matters” incorrectly attributed authorship of the article to Staff Reporter Jeff Sullivan. Inaugural Norwood Art Walk will take place on May 20

Mary Ellen Gambon
Staff Reporter

Norwood Center will experience a burst of creative energy on Saturday, May 20 as it hosts the first Norwood Art Walk from 12 to 4 p.m., with artists and businesses joining forces to attract customers to Washington Street and beyond. The event is the brainchild of marypaz, a Norwood artist who specializes in abstract art but who also does commissioned works including portraits and nature scenes. A public example of her work can be seen adorning a light box on the corner of the Town Common.

She said she was inspired to become an artist at an early age. A friend of her father used to give her paint sets on holidays. She first started with paint by numbers books, “but I always wanted to paint outside the lines,” which eventually moved her to pursue abstract art. “I was inspired to do this art walk a few years ago when I saw that the Mass Cultural Council was sponsoring an arts and culture week,” explained marypaz, who graduated cum laude from Syracuse University with a bachelor’s degree in fine art. “In 2020, I applied for a grant from the Norwood Cultural Council, and I received $1,000.” However, she decided to wait to bring her artistic vision to fruition so that it would not conflict with last year’s Norwood 150th events commemorating the Town’s anniversary. “I didn’t want people to associate it with Norwood 150 thinking that it would be a one-time event,” she explained. “This is something that I would like to see grow to an event twice a year or eventually quarterly if it catches on. I’m very happy just to be attempting it.” She lamented that while there are more abundant art activities for children, resources for adult artists like display locations, studios and classes are scarce. If they can find them, marypaz said “the fees are astronomical.” This is compounded by the decrease in studio, rehearsal and recording space that communities like Boston and Somerville are currently experiencing. “Perks is one business that I really appreciate for displaying local art, but I was told that the wait list to display work there is two years long,” marypaz said. Each artist needs to apply at norwoodartwalk.com and pay a $25 fee. This is an event for artists to display their original work and offer their business cards for future purchase opportunities. After researching art walks in other cities and towns, she noted that there were challenges to selling art because some venues have no solicitation conditions in place. “This event is different from other art events in Norwood because it is only for adults who are professional artists,” marypaz said. An art walk may be a more attractive option than an open studios event in the waning days of the pandemic, she added, because some people are reluctant to go into home studios. The added benefits are to draw people into the business district and expose them to different types of art. “This would be a good thing for businesses to get foot traffic as well as for artists who want to form relationships with these businesses,” she added, noting that some may offer long-term display opportunities. “My goal is to attract artists from surrounding communities to participate.” She also met with the Friends of Norwood Center to engage local businesses. One member who agreed to participate is accountant Susana Murphy of Tax Solutions Inc. on Washington Street near the Town Common, who agreed to display works by Nadia Parsons of Sky Painter Studio, who specializes in painting sky scenes. Another is Graham Stetson, an optometrist and co-owner of Modern Eyes on Washington Street with his wife, Christina. “The purpose of this is for people to get to talk with artists, find out about their techniques, and get to see different types of art,” marypaz continued. “Norwood is on the conservative side as far as art goes, so I wanted people to see art in a non-threatening way. Also, the public doesn’t have the energy all the time to go from location to location. I wanted to keep it in a walkable area.” “Ever since we opened in October 2021, I imagined having local artists display their work,” said Murphy, pointing out the wooden white walls that line the office. “The storefront gets a lot of foot traffic. The artist will get exposure and my staff and I will get beautiful artwork while we crunch numbers!” Stetson pointed out that Modern Eyes has a long main hallway that is perfect for viewing art. “One of the ideas from the start was to utilize that space to display local artists’ works and possibly have consignment work,” he said, noting that the office opened in December. “When marypaz brought up the art walk, I thought it was a good idea to showcase artists’ work while drawing people into the downtown area.” He noted that he and his wife live a 10-minute walk from the office. They tend to see many of their patients during their walks on Washington Street and have felt embraced by the community. “I really feel events like the art walk and the farmers market are really important for maintaining the vitality of the downtown area,” he continued. “It’s good that we have a lot of new businesses going in and improving the street presence. Events like these really need to be done because a vibrant central business district is a crucial aspect of small towns.” In addition to pictures, paintings and pottery, visitors will be able to experience music at the Morrill Memorial Library and on the Town Common. At 12:30 p.m., Boston artist Tommey will be conducting the children’s activity called “We See Jazz” at the library, where children will be inspired to paint to music. At 2 p.m., veteran virtuoso Boston guitarist Steve Marchena will perform jazz, blues and classical pieces for an hour on the Town Common. The ultimate goal of marypaz would be to establish Norwood as “a hub for the arts.” She would also like to see a future art walk held in South Norwood. “My dream is to have a gallery and arts center in Norwood,” marypaz explained. “I want to increase awareness that art is an important part of life and can help us see things from a different vantage point. Maybe then there would be more support from the Town for the arts from an adult point of view.” She added: “We want the people who have been doing this for years to have a space to say, ‘This is who I am.’” The Norwood Art Walk also serves as a prelude to the SONO Arts Open Studios event, marypaz explained. The evening event will take place at the Norwood Space Center at 83 Morse St. Both events have been partially funded by the Norwood Cultural Council and the Mass Cultural Council as well as by in-kind donations from the Norwood Space Center, the Morrill Memorial Library, the Friends of Norwood Center, and TD Bank. In addition to more artists, marypaz said she is seeking additional sponsors. For more information, visit norwoodartwalk.com.

2023 Genesis GV60

Electric time is still here. This week we have a 2023 Genesis GV60 performance electric AWD. The GV60 comes as a base at 314 HP or our press car at 429 HP. In my race days I had a nitros button that gave additional HP. The GV60 also has a Boost button that gives a 10 second power boost up to 483 HP that you can really feel. Driving range is 248 miles on average. I charge it every night with 110 volt conventional plug and get around 22 miles a night. Technology is abundant, as is Napa leather heated steering wheel, rear seats, power front seats heated and ventilated, 21 inch wheels and tires, and a large glass roof with power shade. The power front seats multi adjustable, driver’s seat has power cushion extension, and bolster. It has easy to learn controls, 12 inch dash cluster and 12 inch touch screen center display and Bang and Olufsen audio system. The list of standard equipment goes on. Some say it takes time to learn to drive an electric vehicle, the GV60 feels like a regular car without any noise. The pier is instant and doesn’t hold back until you lift your foot off the accelerator pedal. Entry and exit are easy. The ride can be soft or stiff it’s up to the drive mode setting the driver sets it on. There’s no question the Genesis is a brand to keep in mind for either gas or electric. At $59,290 Base price there is a lot of car for the price.

coyotes hunt or habitat together. Cerqueira said actually, a coyote will eat a fox.

“Only in Disney do they hang out together,” Health Department Director Stacey Lane said with a laugh.

“Wolves would kill coyotes too but we don’t really have any of those,” Cerqueira said, but added that the coyotes in New England are actually hybrids.

“They a combination of dogs, wolves, and coyote, and so they’re much bigger than the coyotes out west,” he said.

He said that residents should not lower their guard in the summer.

“In the summer the babies get bigger,” he said. “So they become more and more active and now they’ll start following their parents.”

Cerqueira also discussed with the Board the currently open part-time position for animal control.

Lane said they have two full-time animal control officers covering Norwood and Walpole seven days a week, and that can make things difficult when one is out sick or tries to go on vacation, so the extra position would be helpful.

“That’s tough, because it means if someone is out sick or goes on vacation, the other is working three shifts, or 24 hours a day,” she said. “So we have posted that position, we just haven’t had any applicants.”

Lane said there are some qualities in an applicant they’re looking for, but she encouraged any interested resident to apply.

“You do have to have some qualifications, but we will send you to training,” she said. “So there are certifications you have to go through and it’s a paid position. We would like you to have a license to carry. That’s one qualification because if there’s a rabid or dangerous animal, you have to take care it.”

In other news, Environmental Health Agent Angelo De Luca gave his monthly inspection and new establishment report. He said Jersey Mike’s has opened and is officially permitted for its Route 1 location. One member asked about Mama’s Bar and Grill, and De Luca said he would follow up with them since he hasn’t heard from the owners in awhile.

For inspections, De Luca said there are no restaurants or establishments that he currently recommends for followup inspections, mainly because any establishments of concern already have said inspections scheduled.

“I’ll be going before the next meeting,” he said. “You’ll see those follow ups on next month’s report.”

Riccardi asked De Luca about outdoor dining approvals. De Luca said the Health Department no longer has any jurisdiction over that aspect of restaurants as its been fully moved over to the Board of Selectmen, but said it would be part of his regular inspection. He said only service animals would be allowed in the outdoor dining area, just like the rules for indoor dinning.

According to the Board of Selectmen and the Board of Health, only Lewis’ currently has applied for and been granted the outdoor dining permit.

“I’m sure you’ll see the others do it again too because I think a lot of people love the outdoor dining when it’s nice out,” said Board Chair Kathleen Bishop. “It brings people here to Norwood too.”

HANSON

Thomas J., Of Norwood, born in Boston, MA, on August 3, 1922, and died on April 27, 2023 in the VA Hospital in West Roxbury, MA. He was predeceased by his parents, Charles and Bridget Agnes (Walsh) Hanson, his sister, Helen M. Breen and his brother Charles (Buddy) Hanson. “Uncle Tom” leaves behind five nephews and nieces: Fr. Francis Breen MM, Maryknoll, NY; William Breen, Dunnellon, FL; Ann Marie O’Malley, Sharon, MA; Patricia McNamee, Foxborough, MA; and Michael Breen, Hillsdale NJ. In addition, he leaves behind seven grand-nephews and nieces, and two great-grand-nephews and nieces. Tom, the youngest of the three siblings, grew up in the South End of Boston, in several apartments on or near Columbus Avenue. As part of the “Greatest Generation” he lived through the Great Depression and then became a soldier in World War II. Despite living during these challenging times, Tom made the best of his opportunities and lived a very fulfilling, rewarding and spiritual life. During his boyhood and young adulthood in the 1930s and 1940s he began a lifelong love for jazz and big band music, later buying scores of 78 rpm records playing this type of music. In his late 90’s, he took great satisfaction in listening to the “Jukebox Junction” on Sirius XM, entertaining everyone with anecdotes about the particular Big Band being played. After leaving high school Tom worked in Boston for several years until the United States entered the Second World War. In 1942 he joined the U.S. Army and did training in Texas – a stint that included driving a jeep from Houston to Fort Bliss in El Paso, even though he had never driven before, a task that enabled him to earn a driving license. In Europe he fought in several battles including the Battle of the Bulge. On Bastille Day, July 14, 1918, the Government of France awarded Tom the French Legion of Honor medal in commemoration of his fighting in two battles in France that eventually led to the liberation of Paris. He fortunately was never wounded in battle and returned to the United States at the end of the war to resume his life in America. Tom took advantage of the GI Bill and studied at both Suffolk and Boston Universities, earning a Bachelor of Finance
